Alex Landau Bio

My name is Alex Landau. Among other things, I am a father, a community member, and a human rights advocate.

I was adopted in infancy by a white family, raised in primarily white communities, and educated in white schools.

In 2009, I survived an extreme case of brutality at the hands of Denver police officers. This became the catalyst for the movement I am now engaged in.

I am currently working as the Community Outreach Coordinator with the Colorado Criminal Justice Reform Coalition and I am a Co-founder of the Denver Justice Project. I also attended the University of Colorado Denver, majoring in Communication with a Social Justice Minor. My primary focus has been but not limited to, seeking racial justice, the transformation of law enforcement and working to end mass incarceration.

I do this work through a lens of passion and intersectionality. Acknowledging the impact of intersectional oppression's (race, gender, age etc.) is critical to understanding how others different from ourselves experience injustice. Passion is important to authenticity and endurance.

I find myself speaking to a variety of listeners ranging from elementary school students all the way up to university scholars all over the country.

I am an Emmy award winner for an animated short I put together with StoryCorps animation team on my experience with police violence.

In doing this work I often find myself at the front line with my community, those directly impacted, allied organizations, and navigating the political sector. I also collaborate with people and groups around the country and even abroad who engage in similar work as a way to build network, exchange, learn, and educate from past and present experiences and personal narratives.

I have pioneered several efforts in the Denver metropolitan area from an unprecedented recall effort of the current district attorney, to going into jails in the Denver area and registering people to vote who are eligible.

I operate in solidarity and learn from those around me. I have developed in to a far more conscious person because of my engagement.
