Per Chapter 30 of the Denver Revised Municipal Code, a Landmark designation application for the University Park Historic District was submitted Councilmember Paul Kashmann.

Residents and community members began the designation process several years ago researching the area, writing a historic context, conducting extensive outreach, and finally completing a designation application. The application is a discontinuous thematic historic district. Typically, while historic districts are based on the significance of a specific area, they are also proposed to follow traditional development patterns of that area, and are thus fairly uniform in shape. The majority of Denver's historic districts follow this pattern, capturing both sides of a street, or an entire block when possible. However, a less frequent configuration for historic districts is the thematic district: a discontinuous district where properties are thematically linked but may not be directly adjacent to one another. A discontinuous district designates properties that have a shared historic, architectural, or cultural significance but are not immediately adjacent and allows them to be formally recognized for that significance. Denver's first, and only, discontinuous thematic district is the Downtown Denver Historic District, which includes 43 buildings throughout downtown. The proposed University Park Historic District would be the second thematic district. The map of the proposed historic district is attached.
