Mariah Moore

I am a passionate accessibility advocate with over 8 years of experience developing inclusive programs and championing disability rights. My work has centered on empowering people with disabilities through community engagement, cross-sector collaboration, and systemic advocacy.

Throughout my career, I've led cross-departmental teams and managed grant-funded initiatives that prioritize accessibility and inclusion. I've cultivated strong partnerships with community organizations and disability advocates to create meaningful change. My approach involves centering the voices and leadership of people with disabilities.

I am deeply committed to disability justice principles, recognizing the importance of dismantling barriers in all aspects, from physical infrastructure to employment, education, and cultural participation. I believe that art, creativity, and community connection are powerful tools for building belonging and wellbeing.

As a potential commissioner, I would bring both practical experience in program development and a strong commitment to collaborative problem-solving. I am eager to work alongside fellow commissioners, city officials, and Denver's disability community to advance policies and initiatives that promote genuine equality, accessibility, and empowerment for all people with disabilities in our city.
