EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Project Description: This project serves to target families in Denver's low-income neighborhoods that are disproportionately affected by resource-poor environments and negative health outcomes. The Denver Healthy and Active Communities (DHAC) is aligned with Denver and the Colorado Department of Public Health and the Environment's priority of working with local communities to develop policy, strategies, and best practices to increase access to physical activity in the built environment to support chronic disease prevention and control. This project is led by Denver Environmental health and focuses on increasing active transportation around schools and recreation centers. This project works closely with many partners and efforts including Safe Routes to School, Denver Public Works, Vision Zero, RTD, and many schools and community organizations.
