The "jail to community collaborative" connects participants transitioning from jail with supportive skills, resources, and relationships to promote positive community involvement, and serving no less than 150 new and continuing clients per month.

Scope of services with performance bench marks: The Community Reentry Project (CRP) and its staff provide critical services for inmates and recently released persons from the county jail. Offenders have a history of repeated violations at the City level (Ordinance) and are sentenced to jail and/or County Misdemeanor level offenses. This effort is part of Denver's implementation of an evidence-based reentry process: The Transition from Jail to Community (TJC) model of the National Institute of Corrections/Urban Institute. The model calls for a comprehensive reentry process including but not limited to client assessment, transition and case planning, targeted services and evaluation. Reentry work in Denver is a collaborative process between the Denver County Jail management, its reentry staff and community based providers; largely those of the Community Reentry Project. This model is designed to target medium to high risk to reoffend inmates upon entrance into jail and provide services to them through transition into the community, with the goal of reducing recidivism.
