Additional Background information:

- Established in 1988, Denver Commission on Cultural Affairs (DCCA) is a mayoral-appointed body that serves the administration and Denver Arts & Venues.
- As a 24-member body, the Commission is a powerful voice for the community; it ensures transparency in the public art process and monitors and stimulates the community to engage in the implementation of IMAGINE 2020.
- Sec 2-213: The commission membership shall reflect the geographic, demographic, socioeconomic and ethnic diversity and composition of the City and County of Denver and shall have representatives from a multitude of cultural and business communities, such as, but not limited to, architecture, art criticism, art education, art history, choreography, dance, communicative arts, crafts, folk and ethnic arts, literature, media arts, music, opera, painting, photography, sculpture, theatre, urban design; and, as a nonvoting member, a senior staff member from the office of economic development selected by the mayor to serve as an ex-officio member.
- Sec: 2-214: The powers and duties of the commission shall be to: 1) Advise the mayor and city council on the special issues, initiatives and efforts of its constituent groups 2) Recommend necessary procedures, programs, legislation or administrative action and to promote and ensure equal rights and opportunity for the people of the city in connection with cultural issues 3) Annually recommend goals and objectives of the commission 4) Review all works of art or similar cultural or esthetic edifice proposed for city ownership and, except as otherwise provided in section 2.4.4(E) of the Charter, recommend for acceptance by ordinance all such works of art or similar cultural or esthetic edifices approved for city ownership.
