WHEREAS, Bob just completed a 1700 mile walk from Denver to Washington, DC, always willing to discuss Intergenerational Justice with those he encountered along the way; and,

WHEREAS, Bob is a grandfather with growing sense of urgency regarding the very real threats to the health of his own, and the world's other 2 billion grandchildren; and,

WHEREAS, "An old guy, walking from Denver to DC ..." caught the attention of several local news and social media outlets, and by the time Bob got back to Denver, over 1,000,000 US citizens, had heard or read about the "A Walk for Change"; and,

WHEREAS, the World Health Organization report on the health of our children, released in October 2018, flatly stated: "Every day, 93% of the world's children under the age of 15 (1.8 billion) breathe air that is so polluted it puts their health and development at risk."

WHEREAS, the International Energy Agency's 2019 March report lets us all know, despite our current personal, national and global efforts to self-regulate, we added more toxic waste to our atmosphere in 2018, than any other year in our history; and,

WHEREAS, Bob is a resident of Denver and his ongoing efforts on behalf of his grandchildren and future humans, has warranted this Council's recognition;
