- The State Legislature meets Jan 9-May 11, 2023.
- The session is 120 days.
- While Legislators do have limits on number of bills, leadership often waives these requirements resulting in 700+ bills introduced each year.
- The GAVEL Amendment and other rules/laws impose requirements that are different than the City's. If a bill is discussed at committee, it can be amended, passed or killed.

HISTORY AND EVOLUTION OF DENVER'S PROCESS

History of Denver's Process

- During the 1990s, City Council and the Mayor independently contracted with separate lobbyists. This practice actually weakened the voice of both branches of government as state legislators were unsure who really spoke for Denver.
- There were also concerns about inefficiency and wasting of tax-payer dollars. For these reasons, City Council and the administration decided unified representation was more effective.
- Mayor Hickenlooper's chief of staff, Michael Bennet, developed the system we use today:
 - Denver has one voice.
 - Contracted lobbyists represent Denver as a whole.
- Additionally, due to the ever-increasing number of bills and the compressed rate of the session, Denver decided to take positions on bills with a direct operational impact on the city. (Denver does, however, take positions on major policy issues such as housing and climate even if no direct impact.)

The City Lobbying Team is comprised of:

- A Councilmember appointed by Council President
- City Council's Legislative Counsel
- Mayor's Legislative Director
- Clerk & Recorder
- DEN Representative
- Agency expertise as needed

The Lobbying Team's Internal Vetting Process

- Denver only takes positions on bills after they're introduced and only if they have a direct impact on Denver. Typically, each year 150-225 bills have a direct impact on Denver.
- When a bill drops that impacts Denver, the contracted lobbying firm sends it to the city team:
 - Legislative counsel immediately reads the bill and provides the initial legal analysis.
 - Legislative counsel farms bills out to CAO subject-matter experts.
 - Legislative director distributes to professional staff and city subject matter experts.
 - Council representative communicates with council members.
- All feedback is synthesized and a position is developed which is given to the lobbying firm who provides it to State Legislators in a timely manner – often in less than 24 hours.
- The lobbying team meets at least weekly and is in regular communication to decide upon Denver's official position -Support, Oppose, Amend, or take No Position. If City Council and the administration disagree on a position, the City may not take a position.

Councilmember Feedback on Bills

- The Council representative on the State Lobby Team schedules lobbyist updates at FinGov usually before, during and after the session.
- Councilmembers receive updates from the lobbying team.
- Prior to the session, council members, state legislators representing Denver, the mayor and the lobbying team normally have an annual meet-and-greet.
- During the session, weekly updates are provided to council via email.
- Council representative communicates with other members as needed on bills.
- Councilmembers should provide feedback as quickly as possible so that it can be sent with all feedback to the lobbyists in a timely manner.

Denver's Membership in the Colorado Municipal League

- The Colorado Municipal League (CML) is a nonprofit, nonpartisan organization that has served and represented Colorado's cities and towns since 1923.
- CML is the strongest advocate for local control and constitutional principle of home rule, both of which allow cities and towns maximum flexibility over municipal policy.
- While CML's largest member is the City and County of Denver, 270 cities and towns are members of the League led by a representative Executive Board. Councilwoman Kendra Black was elected to serve on the CML Executive Board for six years. She currently serves on the Policy Committee.
- One important factor Denver's legislative team will always consider is whether Denver's strategy and position on a Bill is better represented by CML?
